

I am currently pleased with Indiana's Privacy Law as it pertains to unsolicited telephone calls. I see no reason for the Federal government to lessen the effect of these laws. The constant calls from outsiders has diminished greatly in the past few months. In the past I would receive over 5 hang ups per night, every night, until this law was enacted in Indiana. How are my rights protected against such harassment if you lessen the effect of these laws? Why should business have the right to invade my household night after night without my approval? Why should I have to expend resources to protect my privacy from these businesses (caller ID) when they should have no right to harass me in the first place? I work hundreds of hours per year to pay my taxes to the Federal government. Shouldn't I be able to expect something positive in return.

Thank you for hearing my concerns.
